And Interesting Facts Concerning the Old Fern Creek Fair.

At First Election of Officers Dr. R. D. Porter Was Elected President—Well Known Men Were Interested.

At the close of the great and glorious meeting of August 19, 1880, Fern Creek had established a reputation for fine fruits, and at once was recognized as the leading fruit growing section of the state. It was also clear to everybody that there was a demand for a permanent fair organization at Fern Creek. A mass meeting was called and at that meeting it was decided to organize a Stock Company and incorporate. It was decided to place the shares of stock at five dollars each, and to limit the holding by any one person to five shares. Each stockholder was to receive three admission tickets each of the fair, but no stockholder could draw tickets on more than one share. This discouraging the sale of shares of stock, and encouraging the people of moderate means to become shareholders. There were about two hundred shareholders and this was the secret of the old fair's success. At the first election Dr. R. D. Porter, was elected president; Edward J. Decker, vice president; J. C. Bruce, secretary; and M. F. Johnson, treasurer.

The first Board of Directors was composed of Hon. W. H. Frederick, Dr. J. P. Cotton, Dr. T. A. Hays, G. W. Crum, C. H. Westcott, Benj. Kendall, Hon. E. D. Standiford, Dr. M. L. Cooper, W. H. Ragland, Chas. Bryan, Arthur Brown, G. W. Welsh and E. D. Briscoe. More than half of the above list had gone to their reward. It will also be noticed that many of them were the very best men of the county. It was determined in the organization that the prime object was the development of the county's agricultural and horticultural resources and not the making of money for the stockholders.

Scarcely had the organization been made before a great calamity came upon the enterprise. Dr. Porter, the president, was killed by a steam locomotive, was called away by death before he had fairly begun his work. Joseph Decker was elevated from the position of secretary to that of president, and Bryan Williams was made secretary. I enclose the announcement of this fair which I take from the Fern Creek Fair of 1881.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Fern Creek Association was organized first as a local organization. The immense quantity of fruit shown last year (about 3,000 plates). That the distance from which the fruit came, proved the necessity and value of the organization, and that one to two short a time to arrange and do justice to every thing. A longer time was necessary for the erection of buildings, and permanent lease of grounds. A stock company was formed, and stock was sold at 50 per share. Enough has been subscribed to assure the success of the enterprise, and, as additional is taken, the money will be expended in further improvements. To create a fund for the payment of the premiums on an entrance fee to be paid by all who are not stockholders of twenty-five cents. Stockholders will be allowed three tickets per share. Not designed to have this a money-making affair, but to give the people a chance to see the best of the county for more improvements. The Fourth Annual Fair promises to eclipse all others. The Kentucky Horticultural Society has promised to assist in the fruit display. Our premiums on farm products and garden stuff are such that will bring out to assist in the fruit display. A large show. We are promised a large and varied display of agricultural implements and taken as a whole, we can safely promise the grandest display of fruits, flowers, vegetables and farm products ever made in Kentucky.

We ask your presence and support. This, although the first fair held after incorporation, is called the fourth, the three preceding meetings being recognized as fairs. The classifications in this, the first catalogue, have been followed since that time, practically unchanged both by the old fair and its successors. This year silver medals were given as premiums on agricultural implements.

One peculiarity of this fair is that the names of the judges were printed at the head of each department. There were five judges for each department.

The fifth fair was held with the officers in charge and only three changes in the directory. Liberal premiums were given. A large show headed with fifteen dollars for best collection. Other classes had an average of ten or twelve dollars to head the lists. There were seven premiums offered on babies, and the distinction of best of judges were announced: United States Senator J. S. Williams; Hon. Albert S. Willis, M. C. Hon. W. H. Frederick, State Senator; and Hon. David M. Brewster, Representative.

The sixth fair was held under the same management except that John

SUBURBAN HOMES

Are in Demand and Real Estate Dealers are Designed With Applications For Sites in the Country.

Country homes are still being acquired by Louisville people, and real estate agents are being flooded with demands for property located conveniently to the city, on canal lines and at reasonable prices. It is not true that the rich alone want to go to the country for the summer; for the middle classes are buying farming property. It seems to be the desire of all city people nowadays to get a country home, and thus it is that the real estate dealer is busy selling property for suitable property.

Harold Eigner purchased a country site in Jefferson county, near Middletown, paying $8,000 for it. The property formerly belonged to E. A. Cook, and comprised fifty-six acres of land and a nice residence. Mr. Eigner will improve the place at once, and will build a big stable. The improvements are to be completed by April 15, and ready for occupancy by April 15.

The sale of the Forrester residence, near Pewee Valley, to Evan H. Hamilton was made by the James H. Button Real Estate Company, Mr. Button himself engineering the deal. The property is located within a short distance of Pewee Valley, and is considered among the most valuable in that vicinity. He paid $10,000 for it, and is now planning many improvements. As soon as they are completed, Mr. Hamilton will move his family there and will spend the summer.

MAY FESTIVAL

At Louisville May 6, 7 and 8 Will Have Largest Children's Chorus Ever in South—Great Preparations Being Made.

The May Music Festival, which is to be given at Louisville May 6, 7 and 8, will have probably the largest children's chorus ever organized in the South. Five hundred boys and girls, drawn from the public schools of Louisville, have undertaken some of the hardest musical work ever set before children of that age, and the showing already made indicates for them a unique success.

"Into the World," the great cantata of Benoit, is the chief part of their program, though "Messengers of Peace," from Rionzi, is equally beautiful. There is to be a specially harmonized arrangement of "America" sung by them, and the great audience in the armory will rise and join with the children in singing the last stanza of the national anthem.

For the past six months the work of the children has been directed by Miss Caroline Bourgard, teacher of music in the Louisville public schools.

Walter Damosch, director of the New York Symphony Orchestra, who has general charge of the festival, heard of her splendid work, and wrote at once, gracefully tendering to her the place of conductor for the production of "Into the World."

This action means that Miss Bourgard will have a distinction conferred on few women, that of wielding the baton and directing the work of America's greatest orchestra and at the same time the singing of the largest children's chorus ever assembled in this section. They will appear at the matinee of Saturday, May 8.

CHAPTER X.

A CLEVER RUSE.
"Gee," murmured Dick, as he watched the two girls disappear down the road, "ain't she an attractive girl? Dick, old boy, it's up to you to make good; but blame it, I wonder how. She didn't seem to realize I was on the same earth, no matter how hard I stared, or how gracefully I handed her into her saddle. I don't suppose she had much say so about handing around stray invites, but I think Miss MacMorlan could have said, Mr. Casselberry, we would be pleased to see you at home sometime. That would have been doing the thing decently, I think. Maybe she would have done so if grand father hadn't pranced to the front with that blushing old key. Wonder what he's been bawling that piece of old junk around for, anyway?"

"She had dandy eyes; I wish I had looked at her better. I liked the way her hair looked, all mussed up some way. She has an adorable dimple right by the corner of her mouth. I like girls to have nice teeth, and here's her peaches."

From which remark it may be gathered that Mr. Richard Casselberry's observation was of the keenest.

Tall and attractive, though not exactly good looking; with a dash of devilry in his merry Scotch eyes, and a fine, capable looking mouth, he was, on the whole, extremely good to look at.

Just now the laughter had died out of his eyes, for he was thinking, and thinking hard. Olive Wilbur had made a decided impression upon his susceptible heart and with his usual zeal he determined to follow up the chance acquaintance. But how? He whistled a few bars of The Mulligan Guards in deep meditation—and found the solution.

"In the simplest and original plan-head not to have thought of it sooner," he muttered, "girls are always sure to drop their handkerchief or something every time they stop."

But these girls were evidently exceptions, for half-an-hour's diligent search failed to discover any lost or strayed property.

"Stick to the old boat till she rots, Richard, my boy. Don't be a quitter; if you can't find a way, MAKE ONE."

Then another inspiration came to his troubled brain, and as a result he danced a spirited break-down, dashed into the house, up the stairs and rummaged wildly in his trunk. A small white handkerchief which he had "swiped" a month before from a girl at the White Sulphur Springs, was brought to light.

"Hate to steer into port under a false flag, but all is in the dead line in war—or friendship, as the birds sing. So here goes."

Down he raced and reached the stables before he realized that he could hardly present himself at the MacMorlan home that night, for he was forced to wait until the next day, though he chafed mightily at the delay.

"Oh, Madge!" cried Olive the next morning, as she stood on the vine-covered veranda, "come to a moment. Whom do you suppose this is, acting so queerly?"

Madge came and together the girls peered between the shrubs at a youth on horseback, who seemed to be having some difficulty in making up his mind. Twice he started up the avenue, only to stop and retrace his steps. If they could only have heard him also, they would have had a cut to his strange behavior.

"Richard McCune Casselberry, send your track, and your 'rack, you're slipping!" Of all the blooming green-horns, they were the prize pet all right, all right! Didn't you respect and adore great-grandfather's fight with Cromwell, and didn't you equally respect, though not as aged great-grandfather, some old victor on over the British in our glorious and superhuman struggle for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness? You're a splendid upholder of the family standards to be scared stiff by a petticoat. Kipling said a woman was a rag, a hound and a tank of hair, but when the 'rag' is a riding habit straight from Paris; and the hair—oh good Lord, Dick, bounce off, you're up against a rubber fence. Pull steam ahead, that's the proper spirit!"

By great effort, Dick screwed his courage to the sticking place, and bolted up the drive before it all soaked away.

As he mounted the veranda steps, he came face to face with two young ladies in crisp, cool jupes, whose twinkling eyes belied their dignified demeanor.

"Oh! I beg—," he stammered, then burst into a hearty laugh and recovered his usual debonaire manner.

"Now do you, Miss MacMorlan; good morning, Miss Wilbur. Please don't think I am hopelessly demented, but the fact is—, one of you dropped a handkerchief yesterday and I—er thought, perhaps, you would need it," and he airily produced the memento of the White Sulphur Springs girl.

"Why, no," said Olive taking it, "it doesn't belong to me, and it isn't yours, is it Madge? Oh, I see it isn't, for here is an H. H. in this corner."

Poor Dick was scarlet, but pulled himself together, and said, "Well, truth will come to light, as Bill says. The straight of the matter is, I wanted to come awfully bad, and as you refused to drop one of your own handkerchiefs, I thought this one would answer—as an excuse, anyway. In fact, the prisoner at the bar pleads guilty, but there were extenuating circumstances, your Honor."

Though he spoke to Madge he looked straight at Olive. She flushed and bit her lip, then gave a little laugh as she gaily passed sentence.

"The prisoner is acquitted, if my sister attorney agrees, for the court is of the opinion that it is a clear case of dementia."

Friendship was thus established, but upon Olive mentioning her brother Roger, it advanced with rapid strides.

"Roger Wilbur? Old Roger of 1907? Well, bless my festive soul, I have stumbled into a streak of luck with both feet. Please permit me to salute you, Miss Wilbur, for your honorable connection with me for around Prince of good fellows. Why he's a clear out-and-out brick, and anybody that doesn't come in on that chorus will have yours cordially to fight any day."

The girls plied him with questions and then marched him into the house to meet Mrs. Wilbur. The fact that he was a classmate of Roger's was a ready passport to her favor.

When he left in the course of an hour, he was mentally patting himself on the back. "I'm a lucky boy, all right. Talk about fools stampeding vicinities where the heavenly host tremble to enter—why me for a fool every time, and the bigger he is, the stronger I'll back him, for it pays, Richard, my lad, it pays!"

SOCIALISM

Worthington, Ky., Feb. 25.—Socialism is a word having several more or less distinct meanings. It is used as the common name of a certain interpretation of history, a working class philosophy. The socialistic interpretation of history regards all his history as fundamentally a series of class struggles between a wealth-owning ruling class on one hand and a subject working class on the other. The socialistic philosophy is based upon the class antagonism and consequent social division arising therefrom. It postulates the ultimate abolition of classes through the establishment of socialized industry democratically controlled. Socialistic science changes the present industrial system of production, showing that human labor is the source and measure of value as a political movement. Socialism organizes the producers into a class-conscious political party to capture the political power as a means of realizing its ideal. Its aim is a commonwealth where, under a socialized industrial system, it is born upon the labor market where capitalists and workers meet. The capitalists aim to buy the labor power of workers as cheaply as possible; the workers aim to sell their labor power as dearly as possible. Out of this inherent conflict of interests between capitalists and wage workers arises this present class struggle. It not only stands for economics but also for human liberty; it stands for the law (true) i. e., thus to take something without an equivalent is purely a class wrong; but it not for a law that will allow this. For a worker to stretch a loaf of bread to appease his hunger is punishable and punished by law and then allow a capitalist to exploit the same worker mercilessly and at it good business. Because the worker is a worker dealing with the realities of life laboring with mother earth to minister to the comfort of the race his conduct is generally antagonistic to those of the ruling class who render no useful service and whose privilege is based upon legal fiction. It goes to its way studying the anatomy of present society, interpreting history and organized the working class for the coming change in the power of the money class and the state of the industrial and intellectual force and declares that their importance grows with time; to be aware of the directions and rate of the social moving society, to be conscious of the necessity for class action in the duty imposed upon the workers. At it grows and makes progress. Social movement must not be hindered by its class character and that fact alone would make us believe Socialism is inevitable. When the class of the working class catch up with existing conditions there will probably be a social revolution (by ballot).

Emancipation, not alleviation, is our common international aim; it does not believe in the unemployed having their skulls ventilated with police batons nor thousands of school children every morning being submitted to the unspeakable torture of being taught on an empty stomach, nor ninety thousand girls bestialized by prostitution, nor the country flooded with hireling orators and political pimps who sell their manhood for a dirty living, who blow the foam of bad beer and shout hot air jokes instead of facts and reason, regardless of political affiliations. Money is all some of them are after. So, beware of reformers and compromisers on the basis of quid pro quo or you'll find that you'll be obliged to give your quid, but your enemy will need chloroform before he yields up the quo. But let us strive onward and upward for one ideal, a good government, do all things well for the good of the movement. Our watchword is no compromise. Unite and the world is ours. A. WORTHINGTON.

LAND, STOCK AND CROP.

Our subscribers will confer a favor by sending in reports of stock or land sales for publication in this column.

Powhattan Stock Farm, Pewee Valley, report their first foals of the season by Bohemian King, another by Montgomery Chief.

Beauty Dare 2477, sire Chester Dare 10, was sold by T. A. King, of Louisville, to Eastern parties last week. Price not stated.

Charles R. Long, Jr., of Louisville, purchased a brood mare last week from "Bill" O'Neil, of Pewee Valley, Ky. She was heavy with foal to "Copperfield" son of Chesterfield, dam by Black Squirrel.

T. E. Houshens, of Chaplin, Ky., has a good stable of stuff this year and intends to exhibit them at all of the prominent Kentucky fairs and Louisville Horse Show.

Mares nursing foals should be given a ration that will not only increase their food of milk, but materially enrich it. Oats and bran in equal bulk, with about one-fourth in bulk of corn added, makes a good ration for a mare in milk. This should always be moistened before feeding.

Omally Bros, Anchorage, Ky., report the following recent sales of pure bred berks: To Henry Holtzheimer, St. Matthews, Ky. boar, Rival's Best. To Judge J. H. Hart, Henderson, Ky., boar, Hart's Choice. To M. MacQuitty, Louisville, Ky. boar, MacQuitty's choice. To W. H. Herr, St. Matthews, Ky., boar, Herr's choice. To H. Holtzheimer, St. Matthews, Ky., sow, Model Beauty of St. M.

A noted veterinarian being called upon to prescribe for constipation among some yearling heifers gave each heifer a pound of Epsom salts dissolved in a quart of warm water. This was given as a drench, and for 24 hours after giving it, nothing was given to eat but a little damp bran. In order to prevent a recurrence of the trouble he advised feeding some laxative food as roots or silage.

L. L. Dorsey, The Highlands Farm, Anchorage, Ky., has recently sold the following Morgan stallions and fillies mostly by his stallion "Gold-sheen." One stallion and one filly to Christ Hoepker, of Illinois; two fillies to C. C. Carpenter, of Missouri; one stallion to W. H. Young, of Ohio; one stallion to C. H. Emerson, of Montana; one stallion to E. F. Isom, of Texas; one stallion to C. B. Scott, of Missouri; one stallion to C. C. Spicer, of Montana; one filly to N. B. Coker, of Texas; one filly to W. R. Reynolds, of Kentucky.

A very great loss to the fruit industry results from the ravages of the San Jose scale, a small parasite which sucks the life juices from the tree's inner bark. "This insect," says Professor Quaintance "is the worst foe of the fruit tree. It does more damage to American fruit trees than all other insects together." Yet this scale can be controlled absolutely by spraying with lime sulphur mixture. The same outfit for spraying against the codling moth, blights, and rusts, will put a quietus on this or other scale pests whether they be on apple, pear, or plum tree."
